

Gerald Horner, Deputy Director Kirkland Museum of Fine & Decorative Art

Horner is Deputy Director Kirkland Museum in Denver and has worked closely with the museum's founders, Hugh Grant and Merle Chambers, since 2005 to ensure that all aspects of the museum's operation reflect their vision. The Kirkland is recognized as having one of the most important international decorative art collections displayed in any North American museum with examples of every major design period from Arts & Crafts through Postmodern.

Core to the museum's mission is to elevate Colorado's art history. More than 150 years of Colorado art is shown salon style along with international decorative art to provide a unique and compelling visitor experience. The museum serves as a resource to scholars and the general public through exhibitions, the loan of works, public programs, publications and the assembling of permanent archives.
